Channel One, Russia's main television channel, based at the "Ostankino" Broadcasting Centre in Moscow, is a state-controlled TV station with the highest audience share. The Russian government controls 51 percent of shares, the remaining 49 percent belonging to private shareholders such as the little-known ORT Bank Consortium, RastrKom 2002 and EberLink, all believed to be controlled by oligarch Roman Abramovich.

Channel One also owns some digital-only television channels. The Channel One Digital TV family includes Cinema House (movies), Channel One Music, Time (20th century history), TV Nanny (children's programming) and Television Café (food). The channel retains an audience share of almost 20 percent.

The channel's "Novosti" and "Vremya" news programs are the source for political information for most Russians. The website of Channel One is only in Russian.

Senior management

Konstantin Ernst has been General Director since October 1999.

Alexander Fayfman is Deputy Director and General Producer.

First Channel news department:

Kirill Kleymenov is Deputy General Director and head of the news department. He has worked with Channel One since 1997, when he became head of the news department. Before graduating from the Romanic-German department at Moscow State University he worked for State Radio of the Soviet Union. He also wrote for the Russian news agency Interfax. In 2004 he worked as press officer for the Russian oil giant Lukoil.

Main evening news

"Vremya" (40 minutes starting at 9 pm every day) is Channel One's flagship news program, presenting the world through the Kremlin's eyes. Having first aired in January 1968 and having survived the tectonic shifts in the Russian media landscape since the 1990s, it is one of the most influential TV news programs in Russia. Vremya has the largest audience share of any Russian news program.

Ekaterina Andreeva is one of the two anchors of “Vremya”. She is said to be one of President Vladimir Putin's favourite TV news journalists.¹ She studied law and history at Moscow State University. In 1991 Andreeva started working in television. She has been on air since 1995. (See also ESI picture story Mainstream views on Russian TV)

Channel One's main news program “Novosti” is re-broadcast at 5 am and 9 am, as well as at 12 pm, 3 pm and 6 pm. The last news broadcast “Nochnye Novosti” (Night news) comes on at 11.30 pm or 0.30 am. Channel One also runs news and interviews during its morning show “Telekanal Dobroye Utro” (the Good Morning Channel) from 5.05 to 7 am. When the Russian-Ukrainian gas dispute started in January 2009, the program broadcast nothing more than official statements – by Putin, Medvedev and Alexei Miller – while avoiding commentary by journalists.

Opinion programs

After the news program “Vremya”, Michail Leontiev, Russia's most famous TV-commentator, presents “Odnako” (“However”), which has been on air since March 1999. In April 2001 Leontiev joined the Eurasia movement whose leader, Alexander Dugin, is one of the most influential ideologists of Russian expansion and nationalism. Leontiev once described himself as a voice of the Kremlin. “I am one of the propagandists of the regime. I am a part of the team in the power,” he was quoted as saying by the Nouvel Observateur in September 2008. Leontiev has been a member of the pro-Putin United Russia party since December 2002. He is also the founder of the weekly magazine “Profile”.

As the Russian-Georgian war broke out, Leontiev was on air every evening between 10 and 14 August 2008. He accused Georgia of aggression, characterized Saakashvili as a war criminal and never referred to the actions of the Russian army as something other than peacekeeping.

More “Odnako” programs can be found on:

(in Russian only)

Vladimir Pozner is one of Channel One's most influential journalists and sharpest commentators. Since November 2008 he hosts his own political talk show, “Pozner”, which airs every Monday evening at 11.30 pm. Until the autumn of 2008 he was the anchorman of the weekly political show “Vremena” (Times). His new show, besides its focus on politics, covers social and cultural issues. Born in 1934 in Paris, Pozner lived with his family in France, in the USA and in the Eastern part of Berlin until he was 18. At the request of his father, the family returned to the Soviet Union in 1952, one year before Stalin's death. Going back to France was impossible since none of the family members, other than Pozner's mother, had a French passport.

Maxim Shevchenko hosts the political talk show Sudite Sami (“Judge for yourself”). He is considered as one of the leading Russian journalists and experts on ethno-cultural and religious issues. Besides his work as anchorman for Channel One, he hosts “O Glavnom”, (The Essential) on state-owned Radio station Vesti FM, as well as the weekly program “Special Opinion with Maxim Shevchenko” for Echo of Moscow. Shevchenko graduated from the Moscow Aviation Institute in 1990. He was a special correspondent in Afghanistan, Pakistan, Chechnya, Dagestan, former Yugoslavia, Israel and Palestine, editor-in-chief of the “NG-Religion” section of “Nezavisimaya gazeta”, and author and editor-in-chief of “Sense” magazine. In 2000, he created the Center of Strategic Research of Religion and Policy of the Modern World. He is a Member of the Public Chamber of the Russian Federation. Russia TV, formerly RTR or Channel 2, is the second national channel. It is run by state-owned Vserossiyskaya Gosudarstvennaya Televizionnaya i Radioveshatel'naya Kompanya (All Russian State Television and Broadcasting Company, or VGTRK), an umbrella organisation for six nationwide TV channels such as Rossiya, Vesti, Sports, a children channel, and RTR-Planeta. The holding also runs radio stations such as Radio Russia and Mayak, as well as over 80 regional channels. Russia TV was founded in 1991 in an effort to give Russian president Boris Yeltsin an outlet independent of the Soviet TV channels. Russia TV has the second largest audience in Russian television. In a typical week it is viewed by 75 percent of urban Russians, compared to 83 percent for the leading channel, Channel One. RTR-Planeta, the program for the CIS and Baltic states, has an audience of 50 million people. Vesti, which appears at 8 pm, is Russia TV's news flagship and – after Channel One's Vremya – the second most important source for information for the Russian audience. Its website is only in Russian.

Analysis and opinion programs

Arkadiy Mamontov is a popular journalist and one of four documentary makers for “Avtorskaya Programma Spetsialniy Korrespondent” (The Author’s Program Special Correspondent), a program that prides itself on reporting “objective reality”. Mamontov previously reported for NTV from places like Chechnya and Dagestan. He came to prominence in 2006 after producing footage purporting to show a British diplomat exchanging classified information with local agents through a device disguised as a rock on a street in Moscow. A year later, Mamontov claimed in another documentary that the CIA was funding Russian opposition groups in order to foment popular uprisings of the sort that took place in Serbia, Georgia, Ukraine and Kyrgyzstan. On 5 April 2009 Russia TV aired a film accusing the U.S. of using an air base in Kyrgyzstan to spy on Russia and China.

On 1 February 2009 Russia TV aired “Svoy – Chuzhoy” (Friend vs. Foe), a documentary in which Mamontov alleged that Ukraine had participated in the Russian-Georgian war in August 2008. The film was widely discussed in the Russian press. “In his film Arkadiy Mamontov has absolutely ceased to trouble himself with such trifles as working with facts,” complained Arina Borodina in Kommersant. Mamontov repeatedly used phrases like “according to some information” and blurred the faces and identities of a number of his interlocutors.

“Avtorskaya Programma Spetsialniy Korrespondent” airs on Sunday evenings at 9.05 pm on Russia TV.

Dmitri Kiselyev, born in April 1954, is Deputy Director of VGTRK Holding and, since 2006, the anchorman of “Natsionalny interes” (National Interest), a political talk show aired on the Russian Information Channel “Vesti”. The program brings together high-ranking politicians to discuss (from a nationalist perspective) major issues in Russia’s development. National Interest is broadcast live every Saturday at 11.20 am.

On 14 March 2008, in an article published by the investigative newspaper Novaya Gazeta, Kiselyev defended the channel’s policy of sidelining opposition activists: “(Vladimir) Ryzhkov was endlessly on air, Yavlinsky and Nemtsov in great profusion. But later on, as these heroes’ ratings fell, people didn’t want to see them anymore!”

Special programs on the Caucasus

The Russian Information Channel “Vesti” runs a special program titled “SNG s Kirillom Tanayevym” (The CIS with Kirill Tanayev). During the program, Tanayev, the General Director of the Foundation for Effective Politics (see Think Tanks and Academia section), takes stock of developments in the twelve countries of the Commonwealth of Independent States. On weekends he talks to party leaders, politicians, experts and political scientists. Tanaev recently edited a book on the war in Georgia entitled “Ossetian tragedy. White book of crimes against South Ossetia, August 2008”. <http://europublish.ru/eng/allbooks>

NTV Television*HTBwww.ntv.ru

NTV Television, owned by gas giant Gazprom, is the third federal channel. It retains an audience share of some 15 percent. Founded in 1993, NTV was owned by Vladimir Gusinsky's Media Most holding until January 2001. During the 1990s, when freedom of speech in Russia was almost unlimited, NTV – known for its independent reporting and its criticism of government policy, notably in Chechnya – quickly developed into one of Russia's best TV channels. NTV was also home to Russia's best known and most popular journalists, including Yevgeny Kiselyov, Marianna Maksimovskaya, Mikhail Osokin and Viktor Shenderovich. Shenderovich became famous for Kukly (Puppets), a 10 minute political satire show broadcast on Saturday evening. Things changed for the worse when Vladimir Putin came to power. When NTV did not relent in its criticism of government policy, the company was restructured and sold. Today not much remains of the old NTV. The programming consists of little more than entertainment, crime and soap operas. Only one analytical program, "K Barryeru" (On the stand), has survived. The show's host Vladimir Solovyev is regarded to have close links to Vladimir Putin.

Senior Management

Vladimir Kulistikov is General Director of NTV. He started his career with NTV where he was the first Deputy Director General in 2000. After the channel's sale he moved to the Vesti (RIA Vesti) news agency, a subsidiary of VGTRK state television. In 2001 he returned to NTV as Deputy Director General.

Alexander Nechayev is Deputy Director General of NTV since March 2008. He was previously the channel's marketing director and responsible for strategic planning. In 2004-2006 he worked for Channel One's international programme.

Main news programs

Segodnya (Today) is NTV's main news programme. It is broadcast 10 times a day on weekdays and 5 times a day on weekends. The program is presented by 24 anchormen.

Since 2005 Kirill Pozdnyakov hosts the news programme Segodnya – Itogovaya Programma (Today – Final Issue), aired on Sundays at 7 pm. Pozdnyakov has worked with NTV since 1998. Yekaterina Kopylova and Tatyana Sopova are the show's chief editors.

Analysis and opinion programs

Vladimir Solovyev hosts “K Barryeru” (On the stand), the only remaining analytical programme on NTV. The show features “an intriguing direct debate format between two opposing viewpoints,” wrote Nikolai Petro in March 2005.² Solovyev, regarded as close to the administration of Vladimir Putin, is known for his sharp, polemical and often scandalous statements on a range of issues including politics, economics, religion, sports, and journalism.

www.ren-tv.com

REN TV, owned mainly by the National Media Group (68 percent of shares) and the German Media house Bertelsmann RTL (30 percent), is one of the largest private federal channels in Russia. According to tns-global, REN TV retained a 4.3 percent audience share during the week of 8-14 March 2010. The channel was launched in the beginning of 1997. Its programs are now broadcast to a potential audience of about 113.5 million viewers in more than 700 Russian cities. After its January 2001 sale, NTV hired some of Russia's most renowned journalists such as Marianna Maximovskaya, a former presenter of the interview show Geroy Dnya (Hero of the day) and Mikhail Osokin, presenter of the Segodnya news program. The channel – featuring interviews with leaders of Other Russia, an organisation gathering opponents of former President Vladimir Putin – gained a reputation as the last bastion of independent TV reporting. In mid-October 2009 the owner of REN TV, who also controls the independent Petersburg Channel 5, announced the restructuring of the National Media Group's top management. Both channels are worried about a possible merger and the possibility of meddling by the state-owned RT, which is reportedly expected to produce news for REN TV.

RT, a round-the-clock English-language news channel, started broadcasting on 10 December 2005 and is available worldwide via satellite. The TV station is funded by the state owned RIA-Novosti news agency. By its own account RT regularly airs news as well as “many aspects of Russian history, culture and opinions. Our special projects are specifically tailored to accustom the international audience with the Russian perspective.” In general it is steering clear of criticism of the President and the government, and the Russian opposition is not given a platform to air its views. (See also ESI picture story Mainstream views on Russian TV)

During the 2008 Caucasus War, William Dunbar, a journalist at Russia Today, resigned from RT after criticising the channel’s pro-Russian bias. He told the Moscow Times that a series of video satellite feeds that he had scheduled for 11 August had been scrapped because they reported the Russian bombing of targets inside Georgia. “The real news, the real facts of the matter, didn’t conform to what they were trying to report, and therefore, they wouldn’t let me report it. I felt that I had no choice but to resign”, Dunbar was quoted as saying. One senior journalist at Russia Today called Dunbar’s allegations of bias “nonsense”. “The Russian coverage I have seen has been much better than much of the Western coverage,” he said. “My view is that Russia Today is not particularly biased at all. When you look at the Western media, there is a lot of genuflection towards the powers that be. Russian news coverage is largely pro-Russia, but that is to be expected.”

<http://www.pri.org/theworld/?q=node/20092> (an interview with William Dunbar)

According to RT’s website the channel set up a bureau in Tskhinvali, the capital of South Ossetia, after the August 2008 conflict.

Margarita Simonyan, only 25 when she became Editor-in-Chief of RT, has dismissed accusations that the channel is too pro-Kremlin: “Whatever comes from Russia, especially if it gets government support, is going to be bad, bad propaganda. Is anyone worried that the BBC is getting its funding from people's taxes? Nobody seems worried by that.”³

Channel 5 (5-tv)

www.5-tv.ru

Channel 5 (formerly known as Petersburg - Channel 5), founded in 1992, is a federal television channel based in St. Petersburg. The channel is owned by Yuri Kovalchuk's National Media Group (NMG), which also controls Moscow-based REN TV. The largest shareholders in NMG are Bank Rossiya and Surgutneftegaz, a major Russian oil and gas company. Kovalchuk has close connections to Prime Minister Vladimir Putin. Channel 5 has an audience share of approximately 2 percent and is one of the last independent Russian channels to air critical views of the government and independent analysis.

In March 2010, Channel 5 substantially changed its broadcasting strategy, launching a number of new programmes and inviting well-known anchors such as Alexander Vainshteyn and award-winning journalist Svetlana Sorokina, who also hosts the "Circle of Light" on the Ekho Moskvy radio station. According to NMG representatives, Channel 5 is different from others because it provides "substantive, contemporary, and intelligent programming and is not excessively dependent on the mass audience."⁴

Echo of Moscow (Ekho Moskvy)

www.echo.msk.ru

Echo of Moscow is regarded as one of the most independent radio stations in Russia, despite the fact that since 2002 it has been mainly owned by Gazprom Media (66 percent of shares), a subsidiary of state-run gas giant Gazprom. The rest of the shares are owned by the station's journalists. Founded in August 1990, Echo of Moscow broadcasts in many cities in Russia, in some CIS countries, and via internet. By its own account, it reaches about 900,000 listeners per day. According to tns-global, between July and September 2009 the station reached almost 2.5 million listeners – an audience share of 4.2 percent. Despite a relatively small audience, Echo of Moscow is known for the quality of its various analytical programs, political talk shows and journalists, including Yulya Latynina, Yevgenia Albats and its Editor in Chief Alexei Venediktov. Unlike most state-affiliated TV and radio stations, Echo of Moscow tries to provide a forum for diverse points of view.

Alexei Venediktov has been Editor-in-chief since 1998. Having studied history at the Moscow Institute of Pedagogics, he worked as a postman for five years and as a history teacher for twenty more. In March 2008 Venediktov was re-elected as Editor-in-Chief. In 2002, when Gazprom took over Echo of Moscow, The Washington Post quoted Venediktov as saying: “I am not going to work for a radio station that belongs to the state. I prefer to keep my reputation but not my job”.⁵ In the end, he stayed on board and continued giving opposition politicians and human rights a chance to appear on air. His stance caused friction with Prime Minister Vladimir Putin in August 2008. During a meeting with about 30 representatives of the most influential Russian media, Putin criticised Echo of Moscow’s coverage of the Russian-Georgian war. “You are responsible for everything that goes on at the radio station. I don’t know who they are, but I know who you are,” Putin was quoted as saying by The Washington Post.⁶ See also ESI picture story “Dissenting voices: Ekho Moskvy and Yulia Latynina”.

Analytical programs and opinion

Yulia Latynina, born in 1966 in Moscow, is a well-known Russian writer and journalist. She has been on the staff of Novaya Gazeta since 2001, writes a column for EJ.ru and Gazeta.ru, and hosts a program called Access Code on Ekho Moskvyy. It airs on Saturday evening at 7 pm. She has written extensively on the Caucasus. Latynina's critical coverage of the August 2008 war between Russia and Georgia attracted much attention and controversy in Russia. In December 2008, Latynina received the Freedom Defenders Award from US State Secretary Condoleezza Rice for "exposing corruption and abuses of authority among government officials as well as egregious human rights violations by both government authorities and private actors, particularly in the North Caucasus."⁷ (See also ESI picture story: Dissenting voices: Ekho Moskvyy and Yulia Latynina)

Yulia Latynina's writings on South Ossetia are scathing in their treatment of the local elites. In her view, the government of breakaway South Ossetia is an example of a siloviki-steered structure (siloviki are the representatives of the Russian security apparatus):

"I cannot even describe the regime in South Ossetia as 'separatist'. If you think about it, who would you identify as the separatists there? The head of South Ossetian KGB, Anatoliy Baranov, used to head the Federal Security Service of the Mordovian Republic in Russia; the head of the Interior Ministry, Mikhail Mindzayev, served in the Interior Ministry of North Ossetia; Defense Minister Vasiliy Lunev was a military commissar in Perm; and Security Council Secretary Anatoliy Barankevich used to be the Vice Deputy of the commissar of Stavropol Krai. So who exactly is the Ossetian separatist in this government? Prime Minister Yuri Morozov, perhaps?"

Yevgeniya Albats is a well-known political scientist, writer and professor at the Higher School of Economics in Moscow. She hosts the weekly program "All Albats" and writes regularly for "The Moscow Times". During Soviet times she wrote predominantly on physics and astrophysics. After the Soviet Union fell apart, Albats conducted research on the KGB, for which she received a number of threats. She is still on the "death lists" of various groups on the Internet, Albats told "Der Standard" in April 2007.⁸ She was a close friend of Anna Politkovskaya.

Viktor Shenderovich became famous as a scriptwriter for "Kukly" (Puppets), a popular political satire show that aired on NTV between 1994 and 2002, when the channel was acquired by Gazprom Media. Shenderovich, a strong critic of Vladimir Putin and the war in Chechnya, kept up his criticism of the government in his show "Plavleniy syrok". Shenderovich graduated from the Moscow State Art and Cultural University, where he specialized in "directing volunteer theatrical groups".

Yevgeny Kiselyov was chairman of the board and one of the leading journalists at NTV. After NTV's purchase by Gazprom Media, Kiselyov became general director of TV 6 and then started working for REN TV. At Echo of Moscow he hosts the weekly program "Vlast" (Power). He also writes a column for Vedomosti, an established Russian daily jointly published by the Financial Times and the Wall Street Journal. He contributes to the Russian editions of Forbes and GQ magazines and writes regularly for Gazeta.Ru, a leading on-line newspaper. According to a July 2009 report in the Financial Times, Kiselyov was due to start working for Tvi in Ukraine. "Travelling to Ukraine is like going back in a time machine to the 1990s”, Kiselyov was quoted as saying. “In Russia, there is no open political debate any more. The authorities are hermetically sealed we can just hypothesize about the discussion going on inside.” At Echo Kiselyov could only interview political analysts as politicians refused to appear on his show.⁹

Radio Russia

www.radiorus.ru

Radio Russia went on air in December 1990. In January 1991, it was the only station which reported on the USSR's violent attempt to re-impose Soviet rule in the Baltic States. Today Radio Russia belongs to the state-run umbrella organisation Vserossiyskaya Gosudarstvennaya Televisiionnaya i Radioveshatel'naya Kompanya (All Russian State Television and Broadcasting Company or VGTRK). Radio Russia is a federal broadcasting station which offers news on economics, politics, culture and sport. According to tns-global, from July to September 2009 Radio Russia had above 6 million daily listeners and retained an audience share of 10 percent. It can be listened to all over Russia.

Voice of Russia

www.ruvr.ru

The history of Voice of Russia goes back to the year 1929, when its predecessor Radio Moscow began broadcasting. The latter was the USSR's official international broadcasting station and, as such, a communist mouthpiece and an antidote to Voice of America and Radio Free Europe / Radio Liberty. After the Soviet Union fell apart, the station was renamed Voice of Russia. Today it belongs to VGTRK, the All-Russian State Television and Radio Company, an umbrella organisation of six nationwide TV channels and various radio stations. According to its website, Voice of Russia informs mainly on the views of the Russian government, as well as on Russian culture and tradition. Voice of Russia currently broadcasts in 24 languages.
